“Simulated Plane Fire”

Firefighters douse a burning simulated plane during their annual ARFF training.

Lambert – St. Louis International Airport firefighters doused flames as they made their way inside the 50 foot mock aircraft to practice search and rescue. All three fire houses at Lambert participated in the training exercises that were provided by the University of Missouri Fire and Rescue Training Institute. The Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) requires annual aircraft rescue and firefighting training with live fires for airport emergency response personnel.
